Australia's six biggest carmakers have refused to sign on to a new Climate Change Agreement that has been brought to Parliament. In a statement, the industry said it disagreed with the Government's policy to set an ambitious target, which they say is "unachievable" and "will result in unnecessary regulation". The companies - which are major customers of coal and iron ore, two of the main dirtiest energy sources - say any changes are unnecessary and will do nothing to reduce carbon pollution. "The Government is being ill-advised in its approach. It is also doing a disservice to its constituents by putting at risk jobs and the continued strong investment in Australian manufacturing," the statement said. "Importantly, it risks undermining many of the Government's other energy and climate policies, including its national energy guarantee." The companies' position is a blow to the Government's plan to set a target of reducing emissions to 26 per cent below 2005 levels by 2030. Under this plan the Government intends to enforce emissions reductions through a cap and trade scheme with European Union states. Prime Minister Scott Morrison on Tuesday said Parliament would consider a number of options for legislation to meet the target, including the use of a scheme based on a "global price on carbon". It is understood the six companies are the Big Six carmakers - Holden, Ford, Toyota, Volkswagen, BMW and Nissan - and the Big Four banks - Westpac, NAB, Commonwealth, ANZ and Macquarie. Holden and Toyota have been the most vocal about the issues. "Holden and Toyota will continue to work with the Government to reduce emissions while improving Australia's economic competitiveness," the companies' statement said.
